Q: Replace duplicated pairs in a dictionary key:value in Python I have a dictionary like this: dict = { 'a.txt': 'hello', 'a.txt': 'hello', 'b.txt': 'hi', 'c.txt': 'hello', 'c.txt': 'hi' } I want to use key:value pairs to sort keys. I want to do it like this: ((key1,value1) if key1 not in dict else key2,value2) for key1,value1 in dict.items() In this example I would want to obtain: (('b.txt', 'hi'), ('c.txt', 'hello')) I need to sort keys, then value is not important. In my original dict I have many duplicated pairs. If I use unique() function it removes duplicated keys (the number of duplicated pairs is much bigger than the number of unique pairs). Any suggestions? A: The dict.items() method returns key,value pairs, but you are trying to use the tuple syntax for a key, value pair, which doesn't work. You need to put the key:value pairs into tuples, e.g. (key, value) and then use the tuple syntax for a key, value pair, which is key, value. Your final solution would be like this: ((key, value) if key not in dict else (key2, value2)) for key, value in dict.items() Sorting the keys first and then filtering out the duplicates is not possible in Python, you can only get duplicates as actual duplicates and not as a container for a bunch of different items. /* * Copyright (c) 2004, 2005, Oracle and/or its affiliates.
