Vanadiel Clock for Final Fantasy XI version 1.2.0.263 or above is a simple gadget that shows you the time of day and date in-game. Reproduces the time of day and the date from within Final Fantasy XI version 1.2.0.263 or above. Other Final Fantasy XI timezone based gadgets [edit] Following a loophole being found in the Final Fantasy XI version 1.2.0.263 or above clock modification, the following gadgets may be of interest. What is Vanadiel Clock? [edit] Vanadiel Clock is a gadget for Final Fantasy XI version 1.2.0.263 or above and is meant to help users keep track of the time in Vana'diel. Installation [edit] Vanadiel Clock is a tiny, compact gadget that can be deployed on your Windows Vista or 7 computer. For convenience, the gadget is bundled with other Final Fantasy XI timezone based gadgets. Download and install the gadget on your computer using the download link. Vanadiel Clock uses the local timezone (default), not the system's timezone, so if you have access to your computer's system's timezone (like Europe / US), it may or may not work, but it may. [img]

To check if Vanadiel Clock has been successfully installed, go to Device Manager, go to the 'Devices' tab, and then, under 'Worsted Plug and Play Adapters', look for 'Adrenomed (FINAL FANTASY XI)' and double-click on it. If it installs successfully, a small gadget icon will appear on your computer's desktop.

Security [edit] The gadget can be deployed without fear, but it is important to note that due to the underlying clock modification used by Vanadiel Clock, this gadget cannot be removed. Cleaning [edit] Vanadiel Clock is a standalone gadget that cannot be removed, but it can be cleaned by deleting it from C:\Users*your user

ID*\Desktop\VanadielClock (the user ID, of course, is the ID of the user in whose desktop the gadget resides). Running [edit] Vanadiel Clock may or may not automatically run after
