conoscoÂalgua de.Hyperbaric oxygenation for patients with bone metastases - A systematic review of randomized controlled trials. The objective of this review was to evaluate the efficacy and safety of hyperbaric oxygenation (HBO) in patients with bone metastases. Randomized controlled trials (RCT) of Hiox therapy in patients with bone metastases (BM) were eligible for inclusion. The effects of treatment with HBO were evaluated by assessing the pain outcomes (on a scale from 0 to 10, where 0 is no pain and 10 is worst pain ever) and adverse events (AEs) after the end of treatment. The Risk of Bias tool was used to assess the quality of the included RCT. Risk ratio (RR) with 95% confidence interval (CI) was calculated. Of the 63 identified studies, ten RCTs were included. A total of 1183 patients were treated in the 10 included RCTs. Compared with the control groups, HBO was associated with significant reductions in pain for up to 48 h after the end of treatment (RR for pain: 0.67; 95% CI 0.55 to 0.83; low certainty evidence), but no effect was found immediately after treatment (RR for pain: 1.03; 95% CI 0.82 to 1.29; low certainty evidence). Subgroup analysis showed that HBO was associated with pain reduction for up to 48 h (RR for pain: 0.79; 95% CI 0.66 to 0.96; moderate certainty evidence), but not immediately after treatment (RR for pain: 1.11; 95% CI 0.80 to 1.56; moderate certainty evidence). Furthermore, Hiox therapy was not associated with AEs. Subgroup analyses were not possible due to lack of data
