Prevalence and incidence of obsessive compulsive disorder in Singapore - A national cohort study. To determine the prevalence and incidence of Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD) and Compulsions in the population of Singapore. We used the National Household Survey (NHS) from the year 2004 to 2014 and the Singapore National Psychiatric Morbidity Survey (NMPS) carried out in the year 2012. These two surveys were used to detect all OCD cases among the Singapore population. The NHS database was used for determining the rate of OCD and Compulsions in the years 2004 to 2014. The NMPS was used to detect the rate of OCD and Compulsions in 2012. A total of 55 patients with OCD were detected among those aged 10 to 19 years (2.21% of the population) during the ten year period of the study. A total of 36 patients with OCD were detected during the NMPS (0.41% of the Singapore population), with a crude rate of OCD of 0.37 per 1000 population (0.41% of the Singapore population). After adjustment for age- and sex-specific rates, the age-standardised rates (ASRs) of OCD and Compulsions were found to be 2.93 and 1.85 per 1000 population, respectively.
